References Category:Windows software Category:UpdatersQ: git command for delete whole repo Is there a git command for deleting the whole repo(branch,tag etc) from git repository. A: If you want to remove everything in the repository you can do git filter-branch --prune-empty --tag-name-filter cat -- --all If you want to move everything outside the repository git filter-branch --prune-empty --prune-tags --reflog -- --all but the above one may be slow if there's a lot of reflogs. if you want to move everything outside the repository and restore it git filter-branch --prune-empty --prune-tags --reflog -- --all --index-filter \ 'git rm --cached -r --ignore-unmatch "^ (refs/heads/)?master\\. (?:$)'" If you have tagged branches or tags and want to remove them as well git filter-branch --prune-empty --tag-name-filter cat -- --all If you want to move everything outside the repository and restore it git filter-branch --prune-empty --prune-tags --reflog -- --all --index-filter \ 'git rm --cached -r --ignore-unmatch "^ (refs/heads/)?master\\. (?:$)'" A: Using the --hard option with a reflog (-R) will cause the reflogs to be moved along as well. As all of these will remain, the total amount of reflogs is unchanged, but the reflogs only have the objects that were added after --hard (and no objects before). So in your case, you would have a lot of reflogs without the master branch, for instance. As for the rest, the only way to clean up the reflogs without moving them to a new repository is to find and delete the objects. There are also tools to move the ref
