Osteolytic metastasis of breast cancer cells is the major cause of morbidity and mortality in patients with advanced disease. In addition to the most established role of growth factors in bone metastases, the influence of hormones in bone metastasis formation is under intensive investigation. Our findings indicate that estrogen receptors (ERs) are present in aggressive breast cancers and that this is associated with high-grade tumors and bone metastasis. We evaluated the expression of ERalpha and ERbeta in primary tumors of two hundred and ten breast cancer patients, with and without bone metastases, using immunohistochemistry with specific antibodies. We found a significant correlation of ERalpha and ERbeta expression with the presence of bone metastases (p=0.0002 and p=0.016, respectively). With respect to ERbeta, the positive staining was more frequent in basal-like tumors, in cases with a high expression of epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) and c-erbB2, and with the combined expression of both receptor subtypes. When patients were stratified according to these three variables, those with high-grade tumors 3ef4e8ef8d
