It also needs to be portable so that users can easily . dismount the system to attend order briefings or Digital Combat Command should be fully integrated into . This year, a new development was introduced under the Mentor program, the so-called "digital combat command center", which is essentially a real-time troop control system. This combat command center will include three components. The first is a digital map that will display the locations of troops located in various areas. This will allow the commander to control the forces in real time within the operation.
