Calcium phosphates are commonly used in orthopaedic applications such as in bone cements, coatings, and scaffolds. The design of calcium phosphates (in particular the use of bioactive glasses and glasses-ceramics composites) is reviewed, covering cements, coatings, and scaffolds. The biological behaviour of calcium phosphates is discussed, with focus on degradation and biomineralization. Finally, the current status of calcium phosphate research is summarized.fig"). However, we found no significant differences in both SNRI response at any timepoint and pain relief in the immediate and late outcomes between baseline and fluoroscopy time groups. For a patient who was on SNRI before the stent placement, the use of the recommended fluoroscopy time of 5 min is a valuable reference for the physicians who perform stent placement with metallic stents. However, we could not verify the efficacy of the use of the recommended fluoroscopy time for a patient who was not on SNRI before the procedure. As we could not find any significant differences between the groups, we
