Say we have 2 tables: Table1 Id Name Table2 Id Name and we want to retrieve all records from table1, but excluding the Ids that exists in table2, the query should be like this: Select * from Table1 where Id NOT IN (SELECT Id FROM Table2) but it doesnt work. Is it possible to do it somehow? Any idea? A: Assuming you do have a schema that allows you to do this and an index for the table: SELECT * FROM Table1 WHERE Table1.ID NOT IN (SELECT ID FROM Table2) A: This code will give you all records from Table1, and it is not picking up records from Table2. Select * from Table1 where ID NOT IN (SELECT Id FROM Table2); Not sure what you mean by 'doesnt work.' Your query will find records in Table1 that do not match any records from Table2. This query will give you all records from Table1, and it is not picking up records from Table2. SELECT * from Table1 where ID NOT IN (SELECT ID FROM Table2); The only way that query will return any records from Table2 is if there is at least one record in Table2 where the ID is NULL. Use EXISTS to do a join on table 2 and filter out NULL values. SELECT * from Table1 where ID NOT IN (SELECT Id FROM Table2) AND b7e8fdf5c8

Molecular Dynamics Simulation of Water at an Electrolyte-Graphite Interface. The surface structure of a graphite electrode in an alkaline solution was characterized by observing the potential evolution with carbon reduction. The most stable interface structure is the layered structure of carbon-hydrogen. This is a typical observation in the literature that graphite reduced in alkaline solutions. Furthermore, it is found that water plays a crucial role in this transformation. The surface layer of the interface between the graphite electrode and the electrolyte is hydrated by water molecules, in which K^+ ions are arranged in a part of a monolayer. These monolayer ions formed by electrostatic interaction are separated by free water molecules which is bounded to the surface. The pore size of the specific surface is determined by the structure of the sodium hydroxide ion and the water molecules. This study suggests that the hydrated ion layer and the water molecule layer are required to obtain the stable interface structure.
